Puxico, Missouri – The weekend before Valentine’s Day is the perfect time for Southeast Missouri women to relax and have fun hunting rabbits, according to the Missouri Department of Conservation (MDC). The MDC announces the annual Women’s Rabbit Hunting Clinic is scheduled for Feb. 8, beginning at 8 a.m., near Duck Creek Conservation Area (CA).

“This is a very hands-on course and is an environment where anyone can learn, even if they’ve never fired a gun before,” said Conservation Agent Mic Plunkett.

The clinic begins with an introduction to rabbit hunting at the conservation area headquarters, where the women learn rabbit species identification, hunting techniques, safety and regulations. They then learn how beagles assist in hunting rabbits before testing their shooting capabilities with expert instruction.

"We ensure each participant gets an opportunity to target shoot with one-on-one instruction before we take them to the field to hunt," Plunkett said.

“This is an opportunity where someone who’s never hunted before, or had little opportunity to hunt, to get a hands on experience and really become comfortable with heading to the field to hunt,” Plunkett said.

After target practice and classroom instruction, the group is accompanied by guides while they try their hand at hunting rabbits. At the end of the day, there's instruction on cleaning and cooking the harvest, before the new hunters share their stories around a dinner table. Because of the proximity to the Valentine's holiday, there's usually some chocolate involved in the dinner as well.

Plunkett said those who sign up should come prepared for camaraderie, shared adventures and excitement.

"Every part of the clinic is designed to take someone through the whole experience step by step to ensure safety, a fun time and an understanding of why hunting is important," Plunkett said.

For more information and to sign up for the 2013 Women's Rabbit Hunting Clinic, call the MDC's Southeast Regional Office at (573)290-5730. For more information about rabbit hunting in Missouri, go online to mdc.mo.gov.

Science Experiment 101 - Freeze Bubbles for Fun

Missouri - It's going to get very cold outside! Did you know that you could freeze bubbles? These temperatures are perfect for using that left over bubble mix from the summer or make some new.

Go outside on any day when the temps are way below freezing. Blow a bubble and catch it on the bubble wand. Wait just a few moments while it freezes and it will turn into a cool crystal ball before it shatters.

You can also make icy crystals with your bubble solution. To do this just dip a large loop in the bubble solution, don't blow instead watch the crystals grow. They will form a lattice structure.

So who is brave enough to do this and stand the bitter cold? Let us know if it works and better yet, submit a photo to news@showmetimes.com of your creation!

Just remember to bundle up with layers of warm clothing before heading outside to perform your science experiment
