Ste. Gen Historic Properties to be Preserved for Future

U.S. Senator Roy Blunt (Mo.) released the following statement today after attending a ceremonial signing of the cooperative agreements that will ensure Ste. Genevieve historic properties are preserved, marking the final statutory step needed to establish Ste. Genevieve as a national park.

“Generations of Ste. Genevieve residents have worked painstakingly to preserve and share this unique part of our nation’s French colonial history,” said Blunt. “Thanks to their efforts, Ste. Genevieve will now be a part of our National Park System. This process took a lot of time and dedication on the part of all involved, and I appreciate their partnership in getting to this final step today. I hope even more Americans will take the opportunity to visit Ste. Genevieve and experience the rich history that defines Missouri’s oldest town.”

Blunt joined public officials, members of the community, and National Park Service (NPS) employees at today’s ceremony. In July, Blunt attended a roundtable discussion with the NPS and toured the Bequette-Ribault House and Amoureux House.

In March, Blunt’s legislation to establish the Ste. Genevieve National Historic Park and designate it as a unit of the NPS was signed into law. Blunt introduced similar legislation in May 2016. The NPS released its final Ste. Genevieve Special Resource Study in May 2016, which found that portions of the Ste. Genevieve historic district met the criteria for inclusion in the National Park System.

Ste. Genevieve was founded as a French colony in the early 1700s and is Missouri's oldest town. The Ste. Genevieve National Historical Park will showcase nearly 300 years of history, including centuries-old homes featuring French colonial architecture.

Congressman Jason Smith's Capitol Report - Agriculture Grows Missouri's Economy

AUGUST 30TH 2018 BY DEE LOFLIN

Congressman Jason Smith's Capitol Report - Agriculture Grows Missouri's Economy

Congressman Smith Capitol Report

Agriculture Grows Missouri's Economy

August 24, 2018

This week at the Delta Days in the Bootheel, I'll be wrapping up a 30-county, monthlong swing through southern Missouri's unique agriculture industry. I'm grateful to all the farmers, organizations, and agribusinesses who have taken the time to share with me their successes, what makes their farm unique, and their concerns with the federal government. Over the past month I've traveled the back roads of southern Missouri to listen to local farmers because when the agriculture industry does well, the entire country benefits. And when the agriculture industry struggles, so does main street America.

Missouri is home to almost 100,000 different farms that supply the world with cattle, corn, soybeans, cotton, hay, and every agriculture product imaginable. Agriculture is an $88 billion industry that employs more than 1 in 10 working Missourians, making it the top employer and driver of our economy. The industry has changed some since I was growing up – younger farmers in Mississippi and Scott Counties showed me the latest technology they're using on family farms today to make the most of their resources, and a family operation in Perry County demonstrated the applications they use to keep track of feeding, watering, and create carefully designed nutrition programs for livestock. As much as the technology is evolving, farmers still want the same thing from their federal government: to be able to work their land how they know best without the government making it harder for them.

Farmers brought up a wide range of topics on our stops, because just as agriculture touches everybody, every policy touches agriculture. Businesses in Howell and Wayne Counties walked me through their new expansions and investments made possible after President Trump and I cut taxes across the board and allowed businesses to fully expense internal investments. When we were writing the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act, we wanted Missouri's farmers and small businesses to keep more of their hard-earned money, so they can grow both their businesses and the economy. The Tax Cuts and Jobs Act lowered the tax rates for farms of all sizes and fewer farms are now subject to the death tax, which especially hits family operations hard as they pass their farms on to a new generation.

Missouri's farmers and ranchers want the freedom to work their land how they know best, but each rule slapped on by career Washington bureaucrats costs them more time and money. Ninety percent of farms are family-owned in Missouri, and just like in the business world, smaller operations have a harder time keeping up with Washington's regulators.

A family operation in Carter County shared with me their frustrations with a constant flow of regulations from Washington. A farm in Butler County walked me through how their healthcare costs have skyrocketed under Obamacare. And almost every farm I visited said they're having a hard time finding help because federal government welfare programs are incentivizing too many people to stay out of the workforce.

Farming is hard work, but Missourians do what it takes to put food on the table. I'm proud that Missouri's products are enjoyed all over the world. It's an honor to fight every day for the hardworking families who grow our country's crops, economy, and communities.

EDA and Wm. Nobbe & Co. to Present Congressman Jason Smith with Legislative Leadership Award during Event at Scott City Location

AUGUST 28TH 2018 BY DEE LOFLIN

EDA and Wm. Nobbe & Co. to Present Congressman Jason Smith with Legislative Leadership Award

EDA and Wm. Nobbe & Co. to Present Congressman Jason Smith with Legislative Leadership Award during Event at Scott City Location

Scott City, Missouri - The Equipment Dealers Association (EDA) has rescheduled an award presentation and meet and greet with Congressman Jason Smith of Missouri for August 28, 2018. The event will be held at longtime EDA member, Wm. Nobbe & Co.'s Scott City dealership from 3:00pm-4:00pm (CST).

During the event, Tom Nobbe, owner of Wm. Nobbe & Co. and Chairman of the Equipment Dealers Foundation's (EDF) Board of Directors and Kim Rominger, President and CEO of EDA will present Congressman Smith with EDA's 2018 Legislative Leadership Award. The award recognizes a legislator who positively impacts how equipment dealers and their customers do business.

"It will be an honor to accept the Equipment Dealer Association's Legislative Leadership Award at Wm. Nobbe & Co., a successful equipment dealership in southern Missouri," said Congressman Smith. "The folks of Wm. Nobbe & Co. work with the farmers of southern Missouri every day to help them get the equipment they need to get the most out of their land and operation. While writing the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act of 2017 I fought for the entire Ag industry and small businesses everywhere who were being punished by an uncompetitive tax code, and I look forward to hearing from the workers of Wm. Nobbe & Co. as we continue our work to improve rural America."

EDA and Wm. Nobbe & Co. cordially invite members of the press, equipment dealers, farmers, constituents and other stakeholders to join us on August 28th.

Wm. Nobbe & Co.
1400 E. Outer Rd. N.
Scott City, MO 63780
